

Australiana

This is a collection of reviews, commentaries, obituaries and other pieces written over the last three decades. They fall into six categories. The first five pieces are concerned with the history of various sports, cricket, football, boxing and a review of the biography of Nick Farr-Jones, an outstanding leader in international rugby. There are four pieces concerned with some special people and three on Australian science. The fourth group is history and politics, with reviews of books on intellectual movements, a personal report of second thoughts some time after the Vietnam War and some meditations on the seismic impact of conscription for Vietnam on the political alignment of many people in the newly educated middle class. Three address academic topics. There are some stimulating thoughts from Professor John Anderson (1893-1962) on university reform, a survey of philosophy in Australia which concluded that John Anderson's influence was not all to the good, and a summary of a marvellous piece of scholarship by Friedman and Miller that is just about the best rejoinder to POMO literary theory in the literature. Finally there are three fragments of memoirs; one of them by a colleague who worked in rural community health in the 1970s and another by a farmer/engineer who was my partner in technical editing in the Sydney Water Board in the 1990s.
